New York officials want the federal government to help fund a Penn Station resiliency project, which would make sure commuters aren't stranded if another storm hits. / GETTY IMAGES

Penn Station tops NY resiliency plan

Upgrade. New York is asking for federal assistance to pay for transit resiliency projects.

New York State wants to make sure that the hundreds of thousands of people who use Penn Station every day aren't stranded when the next storm hits New York City.

The state is asking the federal government for most of the roughly $4.9 billion officials say New York needs to better prepare the region's transit infrastructure.

Gov. Andrew Cuomo's office, with the Port Authority, released a list of 32 priorities, topped by New York's plans to bolster Penn Station's resiliency.

The Federal Transit Administration has already committed $3 billion in grants to pay for resiliency projects in areas affected by Superstorm Sandy. The state hopes to get some of those funds for its projects.

The plan for Penn Station would cost $516 million, with about $387 million eligible for federal funding.

Planned improvements include ensuring that the state has an alternative for Metro-North riders in case of any failures along lines between Manhattan and Connecticut.

"These projects build on the state's commitment to transforming our infrastructure, transportation networks, energy supply and coastal protections to better protect New Yorkers from future disaster," Cuomo said in a statement.

The state has to wait for the federal agency to review its application, but the Cuomo administration said it hopes that this process is expedited in order to fund the projects as soon as possible.

The governor has already managed to secure bipartisan support for the proposal in Congress, lining up votes of confidence from New York Reps. Charles Rangel, Peter King, Carolyn Maloney and Michael Grimm.

Other priorities

In addition to the Penn Station renovations, other projects would include:

- A "river-to-river" effort to protect the East River tunnels and Penn Station, costing $321 million
- Protection of the Rockaway line, costing $182 million
- Protection of street-level openings, costing $401 million
- Improvements to the World Trade Center station, costing $413 million

Report: Avonte's mom warned teacher he was a 'runner'

Avonte Oquendo's mother warned his teacher that her son was a "runner" and to keep an eye on him at all times, a new report revealed Thursday.

The 14-year-old autistic boy vanished from school in October. His remains were found along the East River in January.

Vanessa Fontaine wrote the note to Avonte's teacher, Julie Murray, who also had the mother fill out a form in which she repeated the warning.

"Safety concerns — Please make sure you keep an eye out he likes to run," Fontaine wrote on the form, which Murray sent to parents without the school's knowledge. "Need 1-1 supervisor will leave the building."

Avonte Oquendo / NYPD

The report by the Department of Education's special commissioner of investigation found that administrators at Avonte's school were never alerted to the form or the note.

As a result, Avonte never received the attention his mother asked for before he ran from his Long Island City school on Oct. 4.

The report confirmed the principal of the Riverview School for special education students didn't have immediate access to the building's security footage or implement a "soft lockdown" when Avonte disappeared.

Security footage eventually showed Avonte leaving the cafeteria unattended and exiting the building through a door left open. A school worker closed it minutes later. CHESTER JESUS SORIA

New H&M label & Other Stories coming to NYC

Shop. The upscale concept by H&M will open its first U.S. store on Broadway this fall.

One of H&M's newer, upscale concepts, & Other Stories, will open its first American store this fall right here in New York City.

The brand was first launched in March 2013 and has stores in 12 European countries.

The new shop will feature a wide range of merchandise geared toward women, including trendy apparel, bags, beauty products, accessories, jewelry and lingerie.

"A big part of our diversity comes from having ateliers in both Paris and Stockholm, but also from the idea of building our collections around four different directions that includes everything from tailored, innovative pieces and quirky bohemian-inspired styles, to flattering feminine silhouettes and rougher elements for that effortless look," said Anna Teurnell, head of design for & Other Stories.

& Other Stories, a concept by H&M, opens this fall in NYC.
STORIES.COM

"The directions may change and evolve as we grow but always ensure styling choices."

The brand's goal is to empower women to create their own personal style and story.

"For us, our customer is ageless and someone who wears things that she feels are right for her," creative director Sara Bengtsson said.

The 6,400-square-foot store will be located at 575 Broadway in SoHo.

New York City population hits new high

If New York City's streets and trains seem more crowded, it's because they are.

Every borough has seen a bump in numbers, according to an estimate of the city's population as of July 2013 released by the U.S. Census Bureau on Thursday.

More than 8.4 million people are calling the city home these days, a 2.8 percent spike since the 2010 Census.

City officials attribute the growth to people continuing to move into and staying in the city, as well as a "surplus of births over deaths."

The ever-popular borough of Brooklyn saw the most dramatic jump, with an almost 3.5 percent rise since 2010. CHESTER JESUS SORIA

City going dark for the environment

Lights off. City landmarks will participate in Earth Hour this weekend.

New York City is going dark to go green.

From 8:30-9:30 p.m. Saturday, the Empire State Building, Rockefeller Center, parts of Times Square and other city institutions will turn off the city's brightest lights to promote energy conservation for the annual Earth Hour.

Organized by the World Wildlife Fund, the international event aims to not only raise awareness but inspire individuals and groups to make environmentally friendly decisions.

"Earth Hour has always been more than just about lights off," Earth Hour head and co-founder Andy Ridley said.

Christie's internal investigation clears him in 'Bridgegate'

Opponents. The Democratic National Committee criticized the report as an "expensive sham."

Gov. Chris Christie / GETTY IMAGES

An investigation commissioned by New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie cleared the potential Republican presidential contender on Thursday of wrongdoing in the "Bridgegate" scandal and blamed senior staffers for orchestrating the massive traffic jam.

The internal review was conducted by a law firm hired by Christie, whose top staffers have been accused of planning the traffic tie-up at the George Washington Bridge in September 2013 as political payback after Mayor Mark Sokolich of Fort Lee, N.J., declined to endorse Christie's re-election.

The report has no legal weight and is eyed with suspicion by many critics because it was ordered by Christie, who in January fired the staffers and denied any involvement.

The report doubted the veracity of a conversation between David Wildstein, a Christie appointee to the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, which oversees the bridge, and Christie's press secretary after the scandal broke in December, in which Wildstein said he had informed the governor of the closings as they were occurring. REUTERS

"What we found was that Governor Christie had no involvement in the decision to close these lanes and no prior knowledge of it."

White coat. Meet local physicians pioneering healthy living initiatives.

Two New York City doctors are putting their spare time into two community ventures.

Dr. Roberta Marongiu, a researcher and instructor in neurological surgery at Weill Cornell Medical College, is about to publish a paper on her research into Parkinson's disease. As yet, Parkinson's — which affects motor function, cognition and has psychological effects such as depression — is incurable. Though Marongiu is excited about her research, the time it takes from publishing a paper to implementing treatment is long, which doesn't help patients suffering now. Having heard about the benefits of a non-contact boxing program used as supplemental therapy for Parkinson's patients, she spearheaded Rock Steady Boxing classes at Gleason's Gym in DUMBO, Brooklyn.

"The research in the lab focuses on a cure for the future — Rock Steady Boxing focuses on assisting those suffering from Parkinson's in the present," says Marongiu. The program is already proven to slow the disease and, in some cases, even reverse progression.

"The results are amazing," she says. "Boxing's an intense cardio workout that constantly changes, so muscles don't get a chance to adapt. It requires coordination and balance and helps with the motor functions. ... The social aspect helps with depression and anxiety, and patients feel like they are fighting back."

At Lenox Hill Hospital, Dr. Robert Graham often trades his lab coat for an apron. The associate program director of the internal medicine residency program and director of integrative health and therapies teaches medical interns and residents to cook. It's all part of the philanthropic Fare Wellness program he launched in 2012 with his wife, Julie, a health coach and yoga instructor. The goal is for doctors to learn to live, cook and eat by example, empowering them to become role models and teachers for their patients.

"By teaching doctors to cook healthy food, they can enable their patients," says Graham.

"We need to see food as primary medicine and drugs as a second option. This is about nutrition as disease prevention."

Promising research from NYC doctors

In the lab. What these physicians are working on now could one day save lives.

Your doctor might hold the cure for a problem that's been bugging the medical community. Read on to learn about three local physicians' exciting fieldwork.

Doctor-patient communication's importance in cancer prevention

Who's doing it? Columbia University's Dr. Charles Basch, colorectal cancer researcher for the American Cancer Society
What did he do? Basch's research is a follow-up to a previous study that led to increased awareness of colon cancer screening. But with screening rates still low, more needed to be done. "This study targets doctors as a potential source of communication," he says. "We need to provide doctors with adaptive training and educate them on the barriers patients face. Doctors need to make patients more comfortable."
When will treatment be available? He's hoping to discern the study's effectiveness "in the coming months," he says. "All doctors agree that colonoscopies prevent colon cancer, but we need to tailor the conversation. Then we can implement it better."

New minimally invasive procedure for diabetes and weight loss

Who's doing it? Dr. Louis Aronne, Sanford I. Weill professor of metabolic research at Weill Cornell Medical College
What did he do? Aronne helped develop a liner "to block the absorption of calories from the first part of the intestine." The non-surgical procedure takes a half hour to insert, and patients go home the same day. "It's an alternative to gastric bypass and might reduce the amount of drugs diabetics take."

When will it be available? FDA registration trials will take a couple years, but it will be longer before the procedure is available. Right now, "we're recruiting people for the trials," Aronne says.

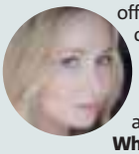
Dermatology

Probiotics for healing acne and rosacea, and slowing skin aging

Who's doing it? Dr. Whitney Bowe, clinical assistant professor of dermatology at Mount Sinai Medical Center, and member of the American Academy of Dermatology
What did she do? Some women taking probiotics for yeast infections noticed another benefit: better skin. "We found that these microorganisms kill off the bacteria that cause acne," says Bowe. "Then, we found probiotics benefit rosacea and skin aging."



When will treatment be available? Some topical products are already out, but "only a few have any good evidence behind them," she says. You can find probiotics in foods like yogurt, miso and sauerkraut.

The downside

Audiences can also be fickle, and even the faith-based haven't always been there to support films aimed at them.

- "The Lion, the Witch and the Wardrobe" — the first in Christian apologist C. S. Lewis' "Narnia" series — was a smash. But the two sequels fizzled.
- "The Nativity Story," about Jesus' birth, sank during the 2006 holidays.

Greg Kinnear stars in "Heaven is Real." / ALLEN FRASER

'Heaven is Real'

This drama adapts the nonfiction mega-seller about a 3-year-old who claimed to have had visions of the afterlife during a near-death experience. This isn't an under-the-radar production; it stars Greg Kinnear, was made by the writer of "Braveheart" and is released by Sony.

'Left Behind'

Remember the cheapie Kirk Cameron films about life after the Rapture? Now they're getting a big (actually, just $15 million) summer movie reboot. Kirk Cameron has become Nicolas Cage, who last battled a religious apocalypse in "Knowing."

'Exodus'

Alas, this isn't another take on Leon Uris' book on the founding of Israel, filmed by Otto Preminger in 1960 with Paul Newman. It's another Moses tale, which was last made as a cheap animated film led by Christian Slater. Now it's another Christian's turn, namely Bale, and the whole thing, due for Christmas, is helmed by Ridley Scott.

JESUS CHRIST SUPERSTAR

Got God? Hollywood has called 2014 the "Year of the Bible Movie." But is it for real? And why did it take so long?

According to a Gallup poll, 78 percent of the United States identifies as Christian. And yet Christians are not a group to whom Hollywood specifically caters. For the last 30 years, religious-themed films — even films that address religion in any way, shape or form — have been almost exclusively the purview of small production companies, who shill directly to churches, religious groups and specific parts of the country (read: not cities).

That seems to be changing — sort of. Friday brings "Noah," a $130 million spectacular starring Russell Crowe as the man spared from the Great Flood in Genesis. It is a major film from a major studio (Paramount), with name stars (Jennifer Connelly, Emma Watson) and made on a scale comparable to the Biblical epics, like "The Ten Commandments," that dominated screens in the 1950s and '60s.

It's not alone. "Noah" is the second Bible film of the year, after "Son of God," to be distributed by a major studio. (There was also the independently released "God's Not Dead," which placed just ahead of "300: Rise of an Empire" at last weekend's box office.) More are coming (see sidebar to your left). Indeed, Hollywood players have described 2014 as the "Year of the Bible Movie."

Many may wonder why it's taken Hollywood so long. In 2004 — after a drought that began in the 1970s — the marketplace was stunned by the success of "The Passion of the Christ," Mel Gibson's hard-R depiction of the crucifixion. It grossed $370 million, plus another $240 in other countries.

Since then, there have been some attempts at kowtowing to the faithful, — but few major attempts, till now. According to Chris Stone, founder of the online community Faith Driven Consumer — which seeks to develop a dialogue with companies for faithful consumers — the studios weren't avoiding the issue.

"I don't think there was any fear," Stone says. "I think they lacked the expertise to produce them well. I think they have the same challenges targeting to women and targeting to African-Americans and targeting to Hispanic people."

Then again, "Noah" isn't just another "The Greatest Story Ever Told." It's a weird, highly personal product that never uses the word "God" (they say "The Creator"), features rock monsters and has Russell Crowe's Noah anguishing over the burden weighing down his shoulders. And this winter's "Exodus" is made by Ridley Scott, an atheist. This new rush to sell movies to the faithful may be a cynical bum rush for money. But it might even be more interesting for non-churchgoers.

Cash is king

If Hollywood has always aimed for mass appeal, things are now more complicated. "They're facing a marketplace that is much more segmented and is demanding specialty products," Stone says. Among those segments is the faith-driven.

- "Hollywood is in the business of providing commercial art, meaning they're trying to make money," Stone says. "If you provide a movie for which a community has an affinity, it will support it. Profit is the reward you receive for giving people what they want."

By the numbers

78%

Stone argues that Christians can't be treated as one big demographic. Of the 78 percent of U.S. citizens who are Christians, most say faith informs their lives in "some way" — they may pray, read the Bible or go to church — but casually. Only 15 percent of Americans are "faith-driven," in that everything they do is informed by their religion.

Thriller. In David Ayer's latest, every single character is an obnoxious, unlikable hothead

More than most, filmmaker David Ayer is drawn to evil. His breakthrough screenplay was for "Training Day," whose villain (Denzel Washington) oozed charisma yet was remorseless in his swaggering depravity. Ayer's new "Sabotage" goes farther: It boasts an entire team of crooked DEA vets, and they're all obnoxious, unpleasant, unlikable jerks.

You probably can't wait for them to shut up or even die horrible, needlessly bloody deaths. And so, the film obliges you. Very loosely modeled on "And Then There Were None" — albeit with a few more shocking, inane twists — it finds an elite team, led by a stone gargoyle (Arnold Schwarzenegger), getting wiped out one by one. Everyone assumes the killers are the cartel from whom they just stole millions. But what if it's someone else?

The actual mystery is muddled — little more than just an excuse to stage gory demises. The agents (including Sam Worthington and Mireille Enos, as the group's token tough chick) give the film its unusual life. Ayer doesn't sugarcoat them: They're all awful hotheads, each driven totally insane by spending years deep undercover. Scene after scene finds them hanging out, pushing each other around, seeing who can fit as many F-bombs into each otherwise artless utterance.

They're not a fun group to be around, but that's the point. There's a strange, seriously twisted integrity to the film. It seems ambivalent over its nasty characters, at once repelled and respectful. Ayer's camera pushes uncomfortably close in on them, whether they're in action or knocking back cheap whiskey at a strip club and running their mouths. It's weirdly admirable, even while it's a drag to watch. MATT PRIGGE

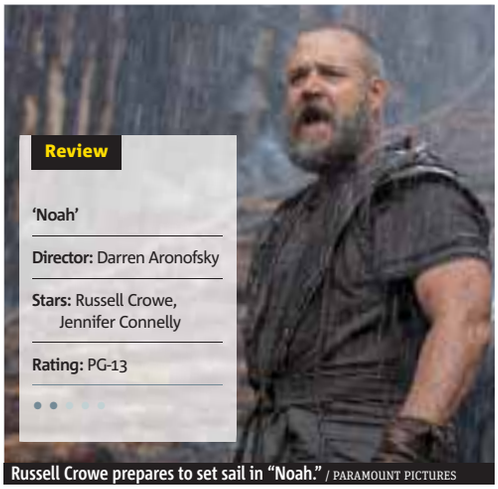
Wait, this movie has rock monsters?

God movie. "Noah" is alternately silly, not silly enough and, a few times, right on the money.



Review

'Noah'

Director: Darren Aronofsky

Stars: Russell Crowe, Jennifer Connelly

Rating: PG-13

Russell Crowe prepares to set sail in "Noah." / PARAMOUNT PICTURES

We need to talk about the rock monsters. They're not mentioned in the ads for "Noah." They are actually in Genesis, referred to as "giants" (who presumably didn't fit into the ark). But in "Black Swan" director Darren Aronofsky's weirdo $130 million production, starring Russell Crowe, they're promoted to a major role. If you've ever wondered how a nice family was able to erect a massive vessel, this has an answer: They were helped by lumbering rock monsters.

The rock monsters are both silly and endearing, which also describes "Noah," but only to a point. This is a deeply personal Bible movie. It's not a soothing bedtime story. It understands — in a way even it ultimately can't deal with — the gravity of what is essentially a tale of genocide. There's a scene where Noah and his saved family sit inside the ark, trying to ignore the shrieks and cries for help from those still not submerged.

But this isn't a revisionist Bible movie. Aronofsky doubles down on the fantastical. God doesn't talk; this isn't the famous Bill Cosby routine. He isn't even called "God," but "The Creator," and Noah gets his messages in vivid, horrifying dreams. These segments play to Aronofsky's strengths as a stylist who designs his movies in bold images, shot by shot.

What doesn't play to his strengths is a story that's been beefed up from three Bible chapters to include such fat as Noah's sons scrambling to get wives before takeoff and a hammy bad guy (Ray Winstone) who leads an assault on the ark. But he does well with Noah's anguish at doing's The Creator's bidding. Jennifer Connelly, as Mrs. Noah, is mostly wasted, but she tears into one screamy speech, where she informs her husband that by following all of God's orders, he may lose the love of those closest to him.

Crowe plays Noah as introspective, sometimes terrifyingly so, but here you can catch a glimmer of anguish in the back of his eye — as though he's just fully realized the severity of his task. Such moments are rare in "Noah," but when they occur, a bloated, humorless but still goofy production seems briefly worth it.

1 Franco: I shouldn't be on LiLo's list

All of the men on Lindsay Lohan's alleged "hit list" have kept mum since news came out that she scribbled the names of everyone in Hollywood she's been in gland-to-gland combat with. Until now.

James Franco is refuting he's ever done the deed with LiLo. In the past, he did say she's come onto him, but that's as far as things went.

2 Mase caught in a holy war

Surprisingly, we were able to find a picture of Mase from this year.

Rapping preacher Mase, the baby-faced protege of Puff Daddy (yes, it's back to Puff Daddy) who rose to fame in the late '90s spitting lyrics on "Mo Money Mo Problems," is now catching heat from his church congregation because apparently, he's back to rapping about some unholy things.

Two years after "Mo Money" came out, Mase retired to serve God, claiming rap was "not real." What's unreal is that people still want to hear Mase songs. He's been rapping here and there for quite some time, but now about a man bragging about sleeping with an engaged woman.

Earlier this year, Mase secretly filed for divorce from his wife — whom he wrote a book with about successful marriage. But a month later, he rescinded the papers. Puffy, your help may be needed again.

LBJ. From 'Breaking Bad' to Broadway

In a season full of exciting plays, "All the Way," starring Bryan Cranston, is one of the quieter ones.

Written by Robert Schenkkan, the new play opened March 8 and opens on the sudden presidential inheritance of Lyndon B. Johnson, followed by his turbulent campaign to officially inherit the title in the next election year.

Of course we all know what happens — but this history play isn't about the outcome. It's all about the process of getting there. LBJ buffs will surely delight in Cranston's shrewd and glib representation of the iconic Southern Democrat. Others may gain a new outlook on the charged political landscape of 1964 — in the midst of civil rights uprisings and escalating global tension, pre-Vietnam.

Staged simply but plotted exhaustively, the show may wear out audience members who fail to plan for three hours of men in suits bickering (with one intermission). If you marathoned all of Season 2 of "House of Cards" in its first weekend, this may be up your alley. Otherwise, you might be glad to have seen it, especially with the impressive Cranston at the helm, but you may hesitate before preordering tickets to the upcoming sequel.

What, you thought the story stopped there? In '64, LBJ was just getting started. T. MICHELLE MURPHY

Showing 'Resolution'

Arts. The New York Photo Festival opens this weekend.

Each new year comes with resolutions for a better self. Sensing the opportunity, the New York Photo Festival sent out a call to artists for those oaths represented photographically, according to each one's concept of the idea.

By the end of January, about 300 submissions were received, from which 21 finalists were selected by two judges: John Berthot, founder of Focus Consulting Services, and Daniel Power, founder and CEO of powerHouse Books.

The work of all finalists goes on display at the powerHouse Arena in DUMBO beginning this weekend. Unlike many art shows in crowded New York City, space is not an issue. The exhibition area on the arena floor covers 5,000 square feet and is capped by 24-foot ceilings.

Power considers the lofty space a definite plus. "Whenever you view an exhibition in a large gallery or museum, the massive height of the exhibition hall or arena makes the artwork that much grander."

Raising the sights of "Resolution" attendees also fits perfectly into the larger mission of the New York Photo Festival.

Founded in 2008 by Daniel Power and Frank Evers, CEO of Institute and the president of Evergreen Pictures, the event not only serves as an American counterpart to European photo festivals like Les Rencontres d'Arles, PhotoEspana and Visa pour l'Image, but as a laboratory to discover and develop the future of photography.

As Power hoped, the photos of "Resolution" mirror the artists. "The project is an effort to have artists think about their moment in time," he explains. "We want to know what defines you and what you aspire to."

Looking at the photos, the answer can seem elusive, whether in the eerie masked beachcombers in "Low Tide" by Sonja Byrom, the red suitcases in Astrid Verhoef's "Urbanite04" (pictured) or the black spandex and rosary of Antonio Pulgarin's "Mother and I."

Ultimately, audience engagement trumps the artists' intentions, as each viewer supplies a new meaning to the image. Power hopes the artists' determination serves as an inspiration as well. "They are pushing their own boundaries, and that is impressive to witness." At the very least, the exhibition resurrects the resolutions of years past and blows new life into them.

Site snarled in controversy

Re: 'Lily Cole: Making all your wishes come true' (Metro, March 27) While the intention of Lily Cole's Impossible.com is probably sweet and lovely enough, there's something missing from Metro's story about this impractical project. Cole is reported to have a net worth of £8 million, yet she applied for and received a U.K. government-mandated grant for £200,000, from the Innovation in Giving fund set up by the Cabinet office's Minister for Civil Society. Frankly, her website is not working. The money could have been better spent on real programs devoted to education, nutrition or mental health. Cole's backer Jimmy Wales refuses to share the grant application with the public. Given Wales' close ties to the U.K. government, it sounds fishy.

Report: Sanchez heads to Eagles

NFL. The former Jets quarterback is now officially on the Eagles.

Sanchez's physical was especially critical to his signing because of last season's shoulder surgery. / GETTY IMAGES

After a brief delay, Mark Sanchez has reportedly inked a deal with Philadelphia to become the backup to Nick Foles.

Sanchez waited to take a physical, but was cleared by Eagles doctors Thursday morning.

Eagles head coach Chip Kelly spoke about Sanchez, a free agent after being released by the Jets last week, at the owners meetings on Wednesday.

"I think Mark is a very, very good athlete," Kelly said. "He's started 60-plus games in this league. He's got great experience. There's a lot of positive qualities to him."

The Jets cut Sanchez on the same day they signed former Eagles backup Michael Vick to a one-year contract. He'll compete with Geno Smith as starter.

Releasing Mark Sanchez saved the Jets $8.5 million in cap space. They used about $5 million of that space to sign Michael Vick.

Garden party gets going

NCAA. Four teams have made the trip to MSG for the East Regional, but only one will leave with a Final Four ticket.

The Garden is sold out for this weekend's East Regionals, so unless you have a spare $1,000 to plunk down on tickets, you'll probably be watching from home.

But the good news is, you'll have two very good games to watch — better than Thursday on paper.

If you do happen to be lucky enough to have a ticket, expect a crowd dominated by the three-time champion Huskies in their old Big East stomping grounds.

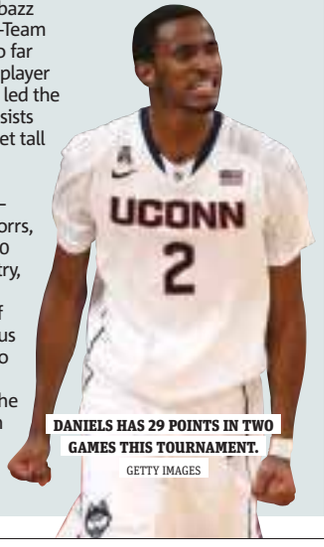
(7) UConn

Trip so far: Beat (10) St. Joe's, 89-81; beat (2) Villanova, 77-65
Next up: Vs. (3) Iowa State, Friday, 7:27 p.m., TBS
Star to watch: Shabazz Napier — The First-Team All-American is also far and away the best player on the Huskies. He led the team in scoring, assists and — even at 6 feet tall — rebounds.
Key player: DeAndre Daniels — Daniels came to Storrs, Conn., as the No. 10 recruit in the country, says Rivals.com — two spots ahead of Georgia's Kentavious Caldwell-Pope, who went No. 8 in last year's NBA Draft. The forward has shown flashes of elite talent, but may be the most inconsistent Huskies player since Stanley Robinson. He needs to score to help out Napier and he'll be matched up with Iowa State's star Melvin Ejim.



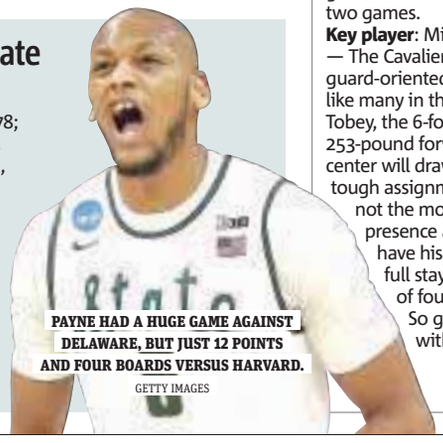
DANIELS HAS 29 POINTS IN TWO GAMES THIS TOURNAMENT.
GETTY IMAGES

(3) Iowa State

Trip so far: Beat (14) NCCU, 93-75; beat (6) UNC, 85-83
Next up: Vs. (7) UConn, Friday, 7:27 p.m., TBS
Star to watch: DeAndre Kane — Kane has almost an exact double in Napier on the side. The transfer from Marshall has been a beast.
Key player: Dustin Hogue — Forward Georges Niang is a loss, but despite his bulk he wasn't the team's top rebounder. That went to Hogue (8.5 rpg). UConn is a guard-oriented team, despite Amida Brimah, and can be beaten inside.

(4) Michigan State

Trip so far: Beat (13) Delaware, 93-78; beat (12) Harvard, 80-73
Next up: Vs. (1) Virginia, Friday, 9:57 p.m., TBS
Star to watch: Adreian Payne — If you didn't know him before he posted 41 points against Delaware, you do now. He's a handful in the paint, in the mold of Zach Randolph.



PAYNE HAD A HUGE GAME AGAINST DELAWARE, BUT JUST 12 POINTS AND FOUR BOARDS VERSUS HARVARD.
GETTY IMAGES

(1) Virginia

Trip so far: Beat (16) Co. Car., 70-59; beat (8) Memphis, 78-60
Next up: Vs. (7) Michigan State, Friday, 9:57 p.m., TBS
Star to watch: Malcolm Brogdon — Frankly there aren't any stars on the Cavaliers, who have cruised through the tournament's first two games with little fanfare. Brogdon is coming off three straight strong performances against Duke in the ACC title game and the opening two games.
Key player: Mike Tobey — The Cavaliers are a guard-oriented team, like many in this region. Tobey, the 6-foot-11, 253-pound forward/center will draw the tough assignment. He's not the most physical presence and he'll have his hands full staying out of foul trouble. So good luck with Payne.

FREE MEDICATION DOSE

New York Doctors Treat Erectile Dysfunction

BY STEVE MUELLER
Men's Health Consultant

NEW YORK • Local physicians at a new medical clinic in New York are so sure their medication will help men with erectile dysfunction, they are offering the first 37 callers a free in-office medication dose.

Erectile dysfunction and premature ejaculation have long been a problem for millions of men, in spite of the popularity of Viagra, Cialis and Levitra. Many men aren't helped by these pills or cannot take them due to adverse side effects.

New York Men's Medical Clinic custom blends over 180 combinations of medications for each patient. "That's why our success rate is so high," says Dr. Kevin Hornsby, M.D. and author of the book "A Doctor's Guide to Erectile Dysfunction". "We help men as old as ninety-four, with diabetes, prostate surgery and heart conditions. Regardless of their age or medical history our results everyday are amazing."

All medications are FDA approved, and no surgery is involved. "We adjust the prescription for a man's performance to 45-minutes, an hour, 90-minutes or longer," according to Dr. Hornsby," and patients see results right in our office. After climax the patient stays erect the entire period of time. This allows them to achieve a second climax and adequately satisfy their partner. No other medication can do this. We offer a simple guarantee: If you don't respond to the medication on the first visit the office visit is free." With that guarantee, local patients have nothing to lose.

Openings are filling quickly for the free in-office medication dose, after that the normal fees will be charged. Patients see a licensed New York physician and are assured of utmost privacy and professionalism with private waiting rooms and an all male staff. Further information is available by calling.
